

Mobility Agreement

The Drug Enforcement Administration has more than 317 offices throughout the United States and overseas. The agency quickly responds to changes in drug trafficking patterns and trends in abuse of controlled substances. As such, DEA requires a dynamic highly mobile work force. Special Agents are transferred on both a permanent and a temporary basis, according to the needs of the agency and the judgment of DEA management. Agents may also be transferred for purposes of career development, also at the discretion of DEA management.

I understand that in accepting employment as a Criminal Investigator (Special Agent), I may be subject to frequent changes in posts of duty. I further understand that these assignments may be made to domestic or foreign offices. I have been informed that mobility is a condition of employment, and I am prepared to accept, without objection, the decision of the agency regarding reassignments. These assignments may be made for career development or for other reasons determined to be in the best interest of the Drug Enforcement Administration.
